Bottom Lands Overrated. We think that the value of river bottoms when compared with fair upland, has been and still is much overrated. For the first 53 face years of cultivation, the bottoms produce beavy crops, with less labor than the hill land. But this state of things is of short duration, unless the low land is within the reach of CORNER OF MAIN AND UNION STS freshets, and thus receives, as it were, an unusual coat of manure from the turbid waters Wholesale Dealers, School Committees and Tenchers any placed on the most reasonable terms

An excess of vegetable matter in soil is of no more use than any other ingredient, and without a due proportion of the mineral or alakaline constituents, it would not bring a erop to maturity. A light spongy rich piece of bottom, is more likely to suffer from drouth than a well composed loam. The changes from wet to dry are more marked in black mould than in loam, because the latter holds on to its moisture with more tenacity.
